The tragedy occurred as one of the Berry family's best annual road trips was drawing to a close. Having traveled north to colorado springs, the family was on its way back to Houston. Throughout the trip, they expressed their joy in a stream of Facebook posts, emails and funny pictures sent to family and friends. The family was excited to return home for the 4th of July holiday.

They drove through the Texas night, parents Joshua and Robin in the front seats with sons Peter and Aaron and daughter Will snoozing in the back of the minivan.

Then, all of it- the happiness, the memories, life as it had been until that moment- came to an abrupt and fiery end on July 2nd near Fort Stockton, Texas.

A northbound car suddenly veered into their lane, hitting the Berry's minivan head-on. Parents Robin and Josh were killed; 9 year old Peter and 8-year old Aaron suffered critical injuries and severe spinal injuries. Currently, they face the possibility of lifelong paralysis, a prognosis they will deal with while also grieving the loss of their parents. Willa, age 6, broke an ankle and an arm.

The Berry kids are now getting back a measure of the love and support their parents gave others as leading members of Houston's Jewish community.

The emotional and financial support the family will need to move through this tragedy will require wider mobilization.
